

SILICICLASTIC RESERVOIRS OF THE MIDDLE EAST

AMMAN, JORDAN • 15-16 MAY 2017

Workshop Outline:

Building on the success of the last AAPG Siliciclastic Reservoirs of the Middle East Workshop which was held in Kuwait in March 2015, a two-day workshop is planned to take place in Amman, Jordan from 15th - 16th May 2017.

Significant hydrocarbon resources, both conventional and unconventional, are locked up in clastic sedimentary successions found across the Middle East. Therefore the exploration and development of such reservoirs are greatly influenced by the prediction of continuity and connectivity of the reservoir facies, and associated structural deformation. The workshop will assist in understanding the regional depositional systems, structural and sequence stratigraphic frameworks that are key for any exploration activities. On the development phase, being able to predict reservoir characteristics can directly impact the reserve estimate, recovery factor and consequently the Net Present Value (NPV) of a field development project.

This workshop will be dedicated to knowledge sharing, exchanging ideas, and workflows pertaining to exploration and development of siliciclastic reservoirs in the Middle East region. The workshop will focus on case studies involving field and outcrop scale reservoir characterization as well as regional depositional models and their sequence stratigraphic frameworks. Selected speakers will share their knowledge and experience in various aspects. Cores display sessions will be held in separate breakout groups along with poster presentations.

The workshop will be followed by an optional geological field trip that will cover the area around Wadi Rum about 60km to the Northeast of Aqaba city. These Paleozoic (Cambrian to Ordovician) sediments are dominated by sandstone formations, along with a hot shale unit that is represented by the Mudawwara Formation of Silurian Age. During this trip various siliciclastic facies will be observed with an emphasis on sedimentary structures, rock fabric, paleogeography, paleontology, and depositional environments.

Benefits of Attending:

The workshop is an opportunity for attendees to receive up-to-date knowledge about clastic reservoir characterization, exposure to regional stratigraphic case studies and to be introduced to state of the art-technologies utilized to explore and develop these important reservoirs. It is an opportunity to network and share experiences. The participants will receive a summary of the breakout sessions and discussions, lessons learned and a USB with abstracts for papers presented in the workshop.

Who Should Attend:

Geologists, geophysicists, petrophysicists, petroleum technologists, reservoir engineers and decision makers working in exploration, appraisal and development of hydrocarbon accumulation in clastic reservoirs.
